Considering that (Item 7) of Customary International Humanitarian Law and Articles 48 and 54 of the First Additional Protocol to the Geneva Conventions of 1949, and thus, targeting livelihood resources such as power stations, water stations, and petroleum refineries constitutes a war crime, especially as this targeting contradicts the principle of proportionality ...

The estimated cost of the three facilities, Qamishli, Amuda, and the Western ,Dam in Hasakah, is around 3,700,000 million USD according to the Monitoring and Information Center (MIC). Other statistics indicated losses in the power sector amounting to about 54 million USD in addition to the destruction of several hospitals, laboratories, and sectors of oil and gas. The shelling resulted in a power outage for the entire Hasakah Governorate.

Conclusion :

The Turkish escalation and aggression in the northeastern regions of Syria constitute a flagrant violation of international laws and Syrian sovereignty. It once again proves that Turkey does not adhere to the principles and values of good neighborliness. Its continuous aggression since October 4th, through airstrikes and drone attacks on energy facilities, vital facilities, and services is hostile, brutal, and unprecedented.

These acts amount to countless war crimes, resulting in numerous casualties and martyrs, including civilian construction workers and military personnel. This is a blatant violation of both international law and international humanitarian law.

According to the (Item 54) of the First Additional Protocol to the Geneva Conventions, attacking vital facilities, materials essential for the survival of civilian populations, or deliberately destroying, removing, or disabling them is prohibited

Airstrikes on vital facilities are prohibited with the intention of depriving civilians of them, whether to induce civilians to hunger, force them to flee, or for any other purpose

Turkey's direct targeting and intentional destruction of power stations, oil and gas facilities, health centers, and other vital facilities in northeastern Syria violate its commitments under international humanitarian law and international human rights law. Its actions are amounted to the level of war crimes

The international community and active actors regarding the Syrian file bear responsibility for the humanitarian consequences, as more than five million Syrians in northeastern Syria are exposed to war crimes and genocide by the .Turkish state

Such acts are contrary to all humanitarian values and principles and international law, and must be opposed and rejected by the international community, human rights organizations, and the global legal community. They should be deterred from persisting in their aggression against Syrians on Syrian territories, as these are war crimes and crimes against humanity rejected by the United Nations Charter, international law, and international humanitarian law.
